22. An International Webinar on “Time for nature”- Post Covid-19 Challenges to Environmental Management

International Webinar on the World Environment Day “TIME FOR NATURE” Post Covid-19 Challenges to Environmental Management

Concept Note

Covid-19 pandemic has severely impacted every human being on this planet earth. It has its deep rooted enduring aftermaths on the entire social and economic set up of the world with its larger implications on human health and physical environment. The urban dimensions and causals of Covid pandemics are multiple, including all sorts of environmental challenges associated with unsustainable production and consumption patterns. As the present day cities are primary sources of environmental pollution, it has worsens the pre-existing health conditions of their inhabitants. In addition, municipal waste streams in cities experience a surge in the volume of disposables, increases in use of single-use plastic bags, containers and utensils, and disruption of normal waste management systems due to safety concerns and lockdowns. The webinar focuses on striving holistic sustainable development at both regional as well as global levels through integrated efforts for achieving diverse, social, economic and environmental targets. It addresses the key issues through the lens of the environment and sustainability, and attempts to identify the global impact of COVID-19 pandemic on society. The academic discourses aim to deal with effective responses and recovery plans which needs to take into account the pandemic’s multiple dimensions, as well as its deep roots in environmental stresses and global mobility.

The webinar will serve as a platform for collaborative and cooperative discussions to integrate pandemic management as a part of environmental sustainability and urban resilience. It aims to contribute in the creation of a resilient and sustainable world and to help minimize pandemic risks in the coming future. Exemplary interactions with dedicated approaches will highlight the cross-cutting global development issues ranging from climate change, natural resources and ecosystems management, and sustainable consumption and production, among many others. It will serve as a critical occasion to materialize much-needed transformative changes toward a sustainable society.

Concept Note

COVID-19 pandemic has severely impacted every human being on this planet earth. It has its deep rooted enduring aftermaths on the entire social and economic set up of the world with its larger implications on human health, physical, socio-economic and political environment across the nations. Amid the mounting human toll and global economic fallout triggered by the COVID-19 pandemic, South Asian countries are facing a severe concern towards its health emergency, protection of their people, especially the poorest and most vulnerable and it's a dire need to ramp up action to curb and set the stage now for fast economic recovery. This academic discourse intends to address and anticipate a sharp economic slump in each of the region's eight countries individually as well as at SAARC's level, caused by halting economic activity, collapsing trade, and greater stress in the financial and banking sectors. The prolonged and broad national lockdowns has put forth a downfall in regional growth and warns of a worst-case scenario in which the entire region may experience a negative growth rate this year. Besides, the other areas like environmental management, health and education, trade etc. also need to be readdressed at regional level in order to assure quality life, youths' capacity building and also to sustain economic growth along with nourishing mutual needs.

This International Webinar aims to discuss and deal with effective responses and recovery plans which are needed to take into account the pandemic's multiple dimensions, as well as its deep roots impacting economic circumstances within the SAARC countries. To state suggestive measures to minimize short-term economic pain, by establishing temporary work programs for unemployed returned workers, enacting debt relief measures for businesses and individuals, and easing inter-regional customs clearance to speed up import and export of essential goods. Besides, this also aims to address changing cooperation modalities and political determination towards regional peace and prosperity. Equal expectations are to discuss about reoriented educational plans and employment strategies to adjust human resource within country or in region. The webinar is a platform for collaborative and cooperative discussions to integrate pandemic management as a part of social, economic and political sustainability and urban resilience. It aims to contribute in the creation of a resilient and sustainable world and to help minimize pandemic risks in the coming future. Exemplary interactions with dedicated approaches will highlight the cross-cutting global development issues and discuss policy measures for effective distant learning to unlock remote areas in South Asia. The webinar will serve as a critical occasion to materialize much-needed transformative changes toward a sustainable society.
